EDUCATIONFORFARMERS

First of all, Farmers are always very busy. They haven't enough time to study, and they already know a lot. The problem is important for the farmer. To reach this goal we try to use the experience which American farmers have received from long years of struggle against economical depression and other difficulties of life. There are forms of education for farmers.

Vocational Education. This is training in farming, mechanics, truck driving, car repairs, small businesses and electronic repair services. It serves an important function in the USA to prepare many persons for their lifelong jobs. The education can involve apprenticeships or internships in companies or with businesses, classes which let the student get experienced in the vocational area and lectures or other lessons by persons actually doing the work.

Adult education. It is sometimes called «Continuing Education» because it is often aimed at persons who are already in a profession introducing them to new ideas and techniques. It is also used for persons who are re-educating themselves into new areas.

Field Demonstrations or Field Trials. A very popular educational method in the United States is to invite Farmers to innovative farmers to learn a new technique. During these demonstration innovative farmers explain what they are doing and give other information about their work. Other farmers can ask questions, offer advice and in this way learn from each other.

Extension Education. The word "Extension" means that research and formal education is extended to farmers and rural population from agricultural colleges. The primary way to do this is through Extension Agents who visit farms and advice the farmers. These agents also conduct seminars for farmers, mostly in the wintertime.
